"Now we know that ... some of them were hiring goon squads and others were using the power of their public office for blackmail and extortion. Phillips ... hasn't been connected with that stuff. No, he was handing out money from his agency to pay for the sterilization of black children. By comparison to Phillips, the Deans, the Colsons and the Magruders look almost good....[T]his revelation may explain Richard Nixon's opposition to abortion. There was a better plan....the New Federalism's final solution to race and poverty in America."

Too Many Babies, Too Many Barriers

Poor Women Seeking Sterilization Face a Maze of Red Tape TWY 2/19/1988
By Cindy Loose

Between contractions, Linda Parrish of Southeast Washington begged the obstetrician to tie her tubes. This was her fifth child, and she didn't want any more.

As required by Medicaid rules, she had filled out the forms consenting to sterilization at least 30 days in advance. Now, about to have a Caesarean section, she pleaded for the promised tubal ligation, which could be done at the same time. "I'm a grown woman," she told the doctor. "It's my right."

But in her rush to the hospital, Parrish had left behind her copy of the Medicaid consent form, so the doctor declined to perform the operation.

Three times since that birth, Parrish has repeated the procedures required by Medicaid. But agagain, she has met roadblocks. She is now pregnant with her ninth child.

Her problems accessing sterilization—the most frequently used form of birth control, outpacing even the pill-are common among poor women. A National Institutes of Health study in 1990 found that of 1,200 pregnant women on Medicaid who filled out the forms to be sterilized, only 59 percent actually were. The main reason for the failure: "bureaucratic and institutional barriers."

Anecdotal evidence also abounds. Workers in programs fighting infant mortality in the District cite, among many, the homeless mother of six who at age 25 was told she was too young to be sterilized. Or the crack-addicted mother of seven who sometimes gets stitute. Sixty-two percent of the unintended pregnancies are terminated through abortion.

For poor women, federal funding for abortions ended in 1976.

And among poor women, the rate of unplanned pregnancies is even higher: 75 percent, in part because they have twice as many birth control failures, according to institute research. When they seek sterilization, said Columbia's Davidson, "their history tells them they have not been effective in controlling their fertility and they are making a rational choice

Linda Parrish, for instance, had tried the pill, but one version gave her a blood clot and another caused her to hemorrhage. That ruled out all chemical-based methods.

Asked whether she had considered abstinence, Parrish replied obliquely, saying that the father of her last seven children is still very much a part of her and her children's lives and that she wishes him to continue to be involved.

Abstinence is the chosen method of only 2 percent of all women using some contraceptive method, according to a study funded by the National Center for Health Statistics and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and has been told that once insurance coverage begins, she have no problem finding a doctor do the procedure.

Medicaid rules prohibit the ste ization of anyone younger than 21, matter how many children the p son has. Many doctors feel quea about sterilizing women who are significantly older.

"Women with little education ha their last desired births much earl than college-educated women," vidson said. "But the decision who er to do the procedure may be ma by a 27-year-old resident [physicia whose friends haven't even start childbearing. From his point of vie sterilization seems a premature de

Other Implications

Sterilization carries ethical religious implications as well.

"There are a number of wom around who would want to engage sexual activity without bearing ch dren, and sterilization for that pr pose raises a whole set of mo questions," said John Cavanaug O'Keefe of the American I League, an antiabortion education organization.
