Basic Info

Type: Common Interest - Health & Wellness
Description: Join this group if you are excited about the possibility to protect women from cervical cancer. Even if you are a guy, joining this group can help promote awareness about how hpv causes cancer. Men also can be infected, but their health risks are not as severe.

There are universal websites about HPV under the discussion section-Websites.

Member Comment:
Every woman between the ages of 9 and 26 should be vaccinated for HPV. HPV is an STD that causes cervical cancer as well as other side effects such as genital warts that men can get as well. HPV is transferred by skin to skin contact so condoms are not very effective in protecting you.

Even if you've have had one strain of HPV the vaccination works against 4 different strains (the most common and harmful) so you should have it anyway (men hopefully the vaccination will be approved for you soon).

If you're not having sex you should still be vaccinated because men aren't tested for it and something like 75-80% of sexually active women have HPV (many have more than one strain)...and you never know when something unexpected could happen (please also note that the vaccination is currently only approved for women 9-26 so get it before it's too late)

Please send this to every woman you know and invite them all to this group to learn more. The vaccination comes in 3 shots (start, 2 months, and 6 months after the initial shot). It is a dead strain of the virus so you can't catch HPV from the vaccination and getting the vaccination does not increase the likely hood of more deadly mutant strains forming (like someone stopping taking an antibiotic before they should) so you should get vaccinated.

Whether you're having sex with lots of people or only one or not having sex with anyone you can't predict your partner or when something bad might happen--there are stories on the discussion board from married women getting it from their husbands to women being raped. DON'T RISK IT!! GET VACCINATED AND TELL SOMEONE!!!

Please feel free to post any questions and I'll respond to them as quickly as I can. If I don't know the answer I'll find it.

About me:

I am female with Human papillomavirus, I found out almost a yr and a half ago that I have HPV. I do not have cancer yet but I still continue to have PAP smears every three months. I have had abnormal cells found and removed during coloscopies. Although the widespread use of Pap testing has reduced the incidence and lethality of cervical cancer in developed countries, the disease still kills several hundred thousand women per year worldwide. A recently approved HPV vaccine that blocks initial infection with several of the most common sexually transmitted HPV types may lead to further decreases in the incidence of HPV-induced cancer (Lowy and Schiller 2006). I know where my disease came from and he does not believe me, which is not surprising there are no tests available for men to find HPV. I hope that he has increased his caution level since. NOT even condoms can prevent the spread of the disease.

Who I'd like to meet:

Everyone I just want people to be aware of this disease that has killed so many women. Some of you will be able to guess my identity, but please keep that information to yourself or to a private message. I would like support and to be able to support others. REMEMBER HPV affects just over half of the American College population. It never goes away. Take care

How are things? Just stopping by to say hi. I'm doing my part to spread the word about this. I just saw a commercial on TV the other day strictly about HPV. This is going to be household conversation material soon and then many of us might not have to hide in the shadows anymore.

Well I'm here to inform. I got all three of my shots and several months later found out I had HPV. I caught it in time and my doctor said we had hope cause he didn't see any signs of cervical cancer yet. So I treated it and am now HPV free. So although you get the vaccine that does not promise you won't get it. It just lessens your chances. But you ARE still at RISK! So be careful!
