What is TRAIN?

TRAIN is the premier learning network for professionals who protect the public’s health and safety. TRAIN is comprised of the national train.org site and TRAIN affiliate network sites. Affiliate sites are managed by state and federal public health agencies, academic institutions, and others. TRAIN serves a large portion of the U.S. health workforce.

Because all TRAIN sites are connected, learners on TRAIN can access information about state, local, national, and even international training opportunities available to them, online and in person, at any time.

Professionals can use TRAIN to:

• Search or browse international database for on-site or online training
• Sign up for emails about new courses
• Create a personal learning record of competency-based professional training
• Provide and view feedback about courses
• Participate in online discussion forums

Developed by Public Health Foundation, TRAIN operates through collaborative partnership with state and federal agencies, local and national organizations, and educational institutions. TRAIN is funded by its network affiliates and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.
